Dear Readers,

Plastic pollution poses a worldwide challenge, contributing to the climate crisis, harming vital ecosystems, threatening biodiversity, upsetting food systems, and much more. As the global plastic pollution is forecasted to double by 2040, this year's theme of World Environment Day – "Ending global plastic pollution" – calls for collective action to address the urgent issue of plastic pollution. Plastic production and disposal account for around 5% of global GHG emissions. Global plastic production now exceeds 400 million tonnes and is forecasted to reach approximately 1 billion tonnes by 2050. If trends continue, plastic waste will triple by 2060, with dire consequences for both ecosystems and human health. An estimated 75 to 199 million tonnes of plastic are currently in the ocean, and 92% of microplastics have been found in 60% of fish that we consume each year. Microplastics significantly endanger human health by posing risks like cancer and nervous system damage. More than 100,000 marine mammals are killed by ocean plastic waste entanglement/ ingestion each year. India, the world's most populous country, is now responsible for the most plastic pollution - accounting for around 20% of the world's waste.

To tackle plastic pollution, India has committed to reducing marine plastic litter and microplastics and set a goal to stop adding any new plastic waste to the oceans by 2050 as part of the G20 Osaka Blue Ocean Vision. Steps towards the formulation of a national marine litter policy have been initiated by the Ministry of Environment, Forest and Climate Change (MoEFCC), Ministry of Earth Sciences (MoES), Ministry of Science & Technology, and Ministry of Fisheries, Animal Husbandry and Dairying (MoFAH&D). Studies have been undertaken to identify the source-to-sink of litter, especially the plastic waste that flows into India's coast and ocean waters. The National Marine Litter Policy under formulation aims to track and monitor marine litter in various ecosystems, using remote sensing and AI techniques. It also focuses on developing circular economy solutions, implementing extended producer responsibility (EPR) to reduce plastic waste, and implementing management measures to combat marine litter. It also encourages sustainable coastal tourism and reduces sea-based marine plastic litter, particularly in the shipping and fisheries sectors. To fight the growing crisis of plastic pollution, everyone must refuse, reduce, reuse, recycle, and rethink how we use plastic in daily life.
